

Abstract

This research examines the importance and status of the Arabic language and its impact on the Hebrew language and the Israeli dialectic, clarifying the issues and methods in which the Arabic words are quoted, as well as the reasons that led the Israelis to quote the Arabic words and subject them to many linguistic changes, both in terms of the structural structure of the words and the semantic meaning in order to qualify them. Linguistics and employing it in common terms and terms. Hebrew has always attracted and reworded Arabic words to be purely Hebrew words used by Israelis in colloquial language. In addition to delving into the methods of lexicographic quotation from the Arabic language and how to integrate it into the Israeli dialect in order to enrich the Hebrew language, which is considered a poor language in terms of linguistic wealth