

Abstract

Many academics and specialists in strategic and security affairs follow a theoretical approach in the philosophy of developing institutions related to these affairs, due to the scarcity of research with practical academic meaning that must be applied and the difficulty of keeping pace with developments in that field, in addition to the lack of openness to specialized studies in countries that speak languages. Others, which are difficult to take advantage of, these obstacles are one of the most important obstacles to researchers in the affairs of developing security and military institutions alike, which allows the production of research with a refined theoretical luxury without benefiting from the desired goal of its existence. The research is based on the idea that the security and military establishment in Iraq has gone through many stages since their establishment, as a result of the peaceful and non-peaceful transition of political power, which reflected the overall negative and positive aspects of this transition on those two important institutions, and because the reality of the matter in a country like Iraq requires focusing directly on a problem such as Thus important institutions, many specialists and researchers in this regard found the need to develop them, and it was as a matter of first to develop, strengthen and develop a comprehensive strategy for the state in order to enhance the development of the security and military establishment, as the process of developing the comprehensive strategy needs many resources that enhance their development And from these sources, relying on its diversity and finding other resources and finding solutions within the laid down strategy, there are also components, mechanisms, approaches and approaches that can help in developing the Iraqi security establishment, and the Iraqi military institution has dimensions in its development, including a re-understanding and awareness of the military doctrine, and the conclusion of agreements and treaties It is important to consolidate, support, and develop this important institution.